ANOTHER KICK.

"Many People" (Protest Against the Pest House Location.

In smallpox isolation is a matter of the utmost importance, says the national board of health.

Our board of health has isolated a pest house within a few rods each way from which there are brick yards employing a hundred or more of hands who earn their living there and a few blocks from a college filled with children of all ages, and in a thickly settled neighborhood where all rebel against such doings. A pest house night with the same justice to immediate residents be put in the heart of the city as where it is. We in this locality have lived for years where every breeze that moved was reeking with stench from the slaughter houses and dairy yards, nor has the fifth been moved away from those places, but thrown into the creek to carry its burden of disease still further on.

Must we always pay taxes for the privilege of living in such misery? And now injury must be added to our already injured rights in the form of pestilence and death perhaps.

Our homes are here, and where can we go from this terrible thing, forced upon us? Who can we go to for protection but to the high officials of the city?

NEW BANK.

A Handsome Building for Thirteenth Street.

The Omaha National bank will to-day begin to tear away the old building on Thirteenth street, between the bank and the alley, preparatory to the erection of a new bank. The new building will have a sixty-six foot front, by seventy-six feet deep, and the height from the sidewalk to the cornice will be seventy-nine feet. The foundation will be of gray sandstone and superstructure of pressed brick, with terra cotta trimmings. The bank will use all the space in the first story while the second, third and fourth stories will be arranged for offices.

It is expected to complete the building in time for occupancy by the fall of 1882.

ARNOLD'S CASE.

Found Guilty by the Jury on One Count of the Indictment.

The Plea for the Defense and the Instructions of the Judge.

LINCOLN, January 21.—The trial of August Arnold has just closed. Mrs. James Neville testified that Mr. Arnold came to the house and wished to employ Mr. Neville as counsel and that he (Arnold) would have Judge Dundy removed from the bench in case he did not decide certain matters in his favor. During the testimony of this witness Arnold jumped up and violently objected to what was said by the witness and counsel. He (Arnold) did not wish to be considered insane or crazy on any subject. Mr. O'Brien testified that he had been retained by Arnold as counsel in certain cases. Had held conversations about his cases against the U. P. road, and he (Arnold) said the courts were tools of the U. P., and that the officers of the court would suffer if he was not successful in his cases. Mr. John I. Redick testified that he had been employed as counsel for Mr. Arnold. His evidence was not very different from that of others. Mr. Schultz was recalled and cross-examined in regard to what was said between him (Schultz) and Mr. Poppleton in regard to the cases of Arnold. He was also questioned in regard to a certain article entitled "Judicial Murder," published in the Bee December 16th, which he denied having written.

Judge Dundy then took the stand. The judge thrust his hands into his pockets and awaited the questions of counsel with great composure. The judge testified that certain threats said to have been made by Arnold had been reported to him by a great many individuals. The threats were to the effect that he (Arnold) would put him (the judge) out of the way; also, that Mr. Arnold's attorneys suggested that the case against the Union Pacific railroad be postponed because of these threats. The judge said also that he was doubtful whether the threats made by Arnold would influence his opinion in this certain case. Had conversations with Arnold in regard to the matter of these indictments. Arnold denied having made any threats of violence, but said he would make the points in the case so plain that he (the judge) could not avoid deciding in his favor. No letter received from Arnold contained any threat against his person. The government rested the case here.

On the assembling of the court at 2 p. m., the defendant, Arnold, was put upon the stand and testified in his own behalf. Testified that he never made a threat against Judge Dundy. He then detailed the conversation he had had with the various attorneys whom he employed at different times. They told him (Arnold) that the judge would reinstate his case and he said he would cover the judge to reinstate his case. The question was asked if he intended to take the life of Judge Dundy, which he answered in the negative, but it was excluded by the court. Did not intend to obstruct in any way the operation of the court. He did not employ attorneys to go and settle with the railroad company to his disadvantage and disgrace of himself. Witness said he became angry, and that he wished a rebellion would come and tear up the U. P. road from Omaha to San Francisco and leave no rail. Witness then went over several conversations with attorneys, and that in them he may have made some threats against Judge Dundy, but that if he did make such threats he made them in anger and excitement and did not have any intention of impeding the due course of justice. In regard to the organization testified to in Saunders county, that the only object was to prosecution of justice and that he (Arnold) had no connection with it. Witness testified that he believed in an unseen God and that he was conscious of his obligation to tell the truth under oath. During the testimony the witness became very much excited at times, and it required the joint effort of counsel and court to quiet him. All in all the witness told a reasonable and quite straight forward story. Mr. Lamberton then presented the case of the government to the jury.

The closing argument to the jury on the part of the defense, was an eloquent plea. Mr. Charles Redick spoke earnestly for nearly an hour. The substance of his address was as follows: Gentlemen of the jury: Four or five months ago Mr. Arnold was a client of my father and myself, and the first time I knew of his connection with the criminal branch of the law was about the time when you court learned of it through the newspapers, in which his name was connected with certain terrible suspicions. There was a great noise made about this man. He was a terrible man, an awful criminal. He was a communist and a socialist, and all the papers published the suspicion that he was the murderer of Watson B. Smith. He was a dangerous man, about whose neck the rope of the gallows was fast tightening. And when he was arrested upon the present indictment there was hardly a newspaper which did not say that a greater villain never went unhung. Such a man the prosecution expected to prove him in this court. But as time goes on you found that instead of being indicted for the heinous crime of murder, the grand jury adjourned without finding anything against him. But now you find that there is an indictment wherein he is charged with having threatened the life of Judge Dundy for the purpose of impeding the administration of justice in this court. So, after all this noise, you and the charges against this man are summed down to an indictment of this kind, and the government now admits that the threatening letters were nothing but vapor. The judge himself has denied their existence, and on the other hand says he did receive letters which were uniformly courteous and respectful.

Do not allow the impression to prevail in your minds that in this prosecution the government of Judge Dundy needs vindication, or his person protection. The case is simply between the United States, represented by Hon. G. M. Lamberton on one side and August Arnold on the other. It matters nothing to Judge Dundy what you do with this man. He did not advise this prosecution. I do not believe he thinks this man should be found guilty. The question is whether these threats were made in such a way that you could reasonably suppose that he intended by them to influence or impede the due administration of justice.

Within a short time public sentiment has been changing about this great scandal. The people are beginning to think there must be some other reason for this prosecution than the merits of the case. This man has had the railroad company to his aid; he has been followed by the detective bloodhounds; his lawyers have sold him out, and perhaps he is now receiving the first grain of sympathy which a cold-blooded world has ever extended to him. He stands before this bar as a man of good character. Not a word has been said against his character.

I do not deny that my client made threats against the life of the judge, but that does not make it his duty that the people be adopted to effectuate the perpetration of the crime. There is not one man on this jury who believes Arnold made these threats to his confidential lawyers with the intention that they should reach the ears of the judge, and thus influence his decisions in the suits. It has been shown that when the threats were made Arnold was laboring under the impression that he was a wronged man; that there was no hope for him in a strange country with a great corporation to fight and everybody against him; and believing that he had a good and just suit, he said that if the court did not decide in his favor he would kill him.

These lawyers who heard these threats did not pay any attention to them till six or seven months after the threats were made. Now, if they really thought Arnold meant to kill the judge, why did they not go to him and tell him he was doing wrong and ask him to protect himself? It is an astonishing fact that the only witnesses to these threats were men whom some time have been his confidential advisors and professed friends. All the witnesses prefaced their testimony with the statement that they had been Arnold's attorneys. When this man was relating to his attorneys the story of his wrongs and sorrows, and the lawyers intimated that there might be some difficulty in obtaining his rights, it is no wonder if he did threaten to kill the judge if he did not do him justice.

What was the effect of these threats? Judge Dundy himself says that the case was postponed at the request of Arnold's attorneys. You do not need to inquire what their reasons were. When the case was reached, the judge said he had heard these threats and did not know whether he was in a condition to do justice to the case, and refused to proceed unless both parties requested him to do so. They so requested. The case came up and the judge decided against Arnold.

Has not this man had more than his share of trouble in this world? In this trial it is the rights of Arnold and not the character or safety of Judge Dundy which is at stake. This man's rights are something you are bound to respect.

THE FRY FAMILY.

Grand Concert at Boyd's Opera House, Saturday Night.

Sacred Concert on Sabbath Evening.

It is not often that our citizens are favored with so chaste and elegant an entertainment as those given by the Madame Fry concert company on Saturday and Sunday evenings at Boyd's grand opera house.

Brief as was the announcement of their coming, it sufficed to fill the large house on Saturday night with a select and unusually appreciative audience, and seldom has a crowd gone away feeling so well repaid as on this occasion. The programme included fifteen numbers, well selected and rendered in most exquisite taste. The orchestra won favor from the first, the overture "Symphony of the Mountain" and Fauré's "Golden Wedding Waltzes" being faultlessly played. The c. r. band made a decided hit in Lockwood's "Gathering Home," and Levy's "Young America."

Madame Fry, who possesses a pure, clear mezzo-soprano voice, has an impressive stage presence as well, and was especially pleasing in Ganz's "Nightingale Trill." She is also a master of the E. flat cornet and won deserved applause to the encore in Ariana's "Favor" and variations. Her daughters, Lulu, Eugenie, and Alta have inherited her musical talent to a great degree and met with a reception amounting almost to an ovation. Almost every piece was encored, and the evening was crowned with such success as rarely falls to the lot of any artists who visit us.

The announcement of the sacred concert last evening filled the house to overflowing, scarcely a seat being obtainable in parquette, dress or family circles. The programme presented was an admirable one, and, no doubt, had it not been Sabbath evening, the audience, deacons as it was, being unable to restrain a most decided applause at one or two points in the programme. The vocal trio, "Steal Away to Jesus," by Madame Fry and daughters, was beautiful, and the "Ave Marie," with violin obligato, by Madame Fry and Alta, not less so. The quartette for horns was well received and the magnificent rendition of "Rock of Ages," by the company band was simply grand. Perhaps the most beautiful thing of the evening was the contralto solo, "Not Ashamed of Christ," by Miss Lulu Fry. This young lady must be regarded as the sweetest singer and the most accomplished and unaffected player in the company and cannot appear too often. The closing selection, a vocal trio, "Home Sweet Home" was charming.

The programme was interspersed with appropriate readings by Dr. Stelling, who just before the last number returned the thanks of the audience and of the Lutheran congregation in particular, under whose auspices the company appeared here, for the rare treat they had afforded their hearers.

It would be a fine thing if such entertainments could be often secured, and Madame Fry and her talented daughters bear away with them something more than the admiration and good will of the people of this city, whom they have charmed by their exquisite music.

SERIOUS ACCIDENT.

Christian Anderson Falls into a Gully and Breaks His Arm.

A serious accident occurred Friday about 8 o'clock near the corner of Jones and Eleventh streets. Christian Anderson, a young swede in company with two others, was proceeding along Eleventh street, when he made a misstep and was precipitated into the gully below. He fell about fifteen feet and struck on his face and arm. His face was very badly cut and bruised, and his right arm was broken. The injured man's companions carried him to the Hotel Denmark, where he was boarded. Dr. Merriam was called and set Anderson's fractured limb, and sewed up the injuries to his face. The unfortunate man will probably be confined to his bed for several weeks.

KATHERINE ROGERS.

The Great English Actress in Galatea and Leah.

On Tuesday evening next, Katherine Rogers, the celebrated English actress, will open an engagement at the Academy of Music in a grand double bill, including "Galatea, the Statue," and "Leah, the Jewish Maiden." Miss Rogers steadily maintains her place in the front rank of finished actresses, and as an emotional artist of acknowledged ability. She also appears with the most magnificent costumes and stage settings ever put on here. The Denver Republican says:

The classically beautiful character of Galatea seems to be especially adapted to her style of acting. It is a wonderful creation, the very pretty pictures she forms, with all the grace and elegance that art and study could devise, at the same time so refined and natural that it seemed to be a rare treat to the audience last night, judging from the applause given as each little satire was brought forth.

As Leah she grasped the character like a true artist, and evolved the meaning and purpose to the letter. In the course scene she was grand; she looked like an inspired prophetess, so complete was her conception of the scene. The thrilling pathos of Miss Rogers's voice found a responsive echo in the hearts of all who witnessed her acting last night. The applause was a series of ovations.

Messrs. Myer & Raapke, the whole sale grocers, have removed to Nos. 1317 and 1319 Douglas street. Their rapidly increasing business demanded not only more room but double the facilities of the old stand. It is one of our oldest and most solid houses. Jan 4-6t

A DUEL.

Ex-Councilman Shannon Wants to Fight Inside of Three Weeks.

The difficulty between Barney Shannon and Street Commissioner Ford, which was alluded to in Friday's Bee, culminated in the following CHALLENGE:

To Patrick Ford:
I hereby challenge you to fight me for $500—2100 a side, in any way you may choose, and at any place and time you name, within three weeks, for having insulted my wife. Thereby brand you as a liar.

B. SHANNON.

It is hoped that the police will not allow any body to be murdered, and it is suggested that if a duel results the contestants be compelled to fight at the corner of Fifteenth and Farnam, weapons two inch and a-half nozzles, Siamese couplers, the free use of the hydrants to be tendered the duellists for one-half day. By that time Barney's blood would be thoroughly cooled.

Birds from this city, Wheeling, Va., and Steubenville, Ohio, took part, seventeen battles were fought and $5,000 changed hands. The main lasted four hours. Pittsburg won nearly all the battles.

NARROW ESCAPE.

A Horse Goes Through the Ice Below the Bridge.

A Warning to Those Who Cross the River at That Point.

Quite an exciting scene was witnessed last evening, on the river bank just opposite Boyd's packing house, which came near resulting very seriously.

It appears that yesterday morning Mr. C. E. Mayne went over to Council Bluffs, taking the dummy train and intending to return on the 2 o'clock run. He drove his valuable roadster, "Oscar Phelps," and had his light buggy only on special occasions. Being busily engaged, he missed the dummy on his return and concluded to come back across the ice, driving down to a point just below the bridge to make the crossing.

When part way over, he observed some boys who were skating making violent signs at him and stopped to see what was wanted, when one of them came up and told him he was driving on dangerous ground. On getting out and examining the ice he found his horse's fore feet within six inches of a space where ice had been cut out and the new ice was so thin that the boy warned him readily broke it through with his skate. Mr. Mayne then made a wide detour and had nearly reached the Nebraska shore when suddenly his horse broke through with his forefeet. He got out and unlimbering him pulled the buggy back and then took the horse by the bit and tried to get him on the solid ice. The animal, however, floundered about so that he broke the ice in all directions about him, letting himself and his owner down in the water. Mr. Mayne scrambled out, but the horse worked himself under the ice, all but his head, which rested on a cake of ice which alone prevented him from being drowned.

Mr. Mayne hastened ashore and secured the assistance of several of Mr. J. E. Boyd's men, who took ropes, planks, etc., and finally succeeded in getting the horse out, in a half dead condition. Dr. Chambers was telephoned for and the horse taken to one of Mr. Boyd's stables, where he was cared for until he was in a condition to be driven home.

The accident happened about 4 o'clock and it was 6 o'clock before the horse was rescued from his perilous condition. It was a wonder that he was ever rescued at all. A crowd of not less than 500 people gathered on the bank and watched the efforts made to save the animal. A number of teams had crossed in the same locality during the day and it is a matter of surprise that some did not meet the same fate, but it is evidently dangerous business and the ice is not in fit condition to risk teams on, so that it will be well to look out in making such crossings until another cold snap strengthens the ice bridge. The point at which the accident happened was just where all the filth from Boyd's packing house is discharged into the river and the work was done in the face of sickening filth and stench.

ALMOST CRAZY.

How often do we see the hard-working father straining every nerve and muscle, and doing his utmost to support his family. Imagine his feelings when returning home from a hard day's labor, to find his family prostrate with disease, conscious of unpaid doctors' bills and debts on every hand. It must be enough to drive one almost crazy. All this unhappiness could be avoided by using Electric Bitters, which expel every disease from the system, bringing joy and happiness to thousands. Sold at fifty cents a bottle. Ish & McMahon. (8)
